Andrew Nyamekye, METCO Director, spoke about the importance in hiring diverse faculty in the lives of the students. Ms. Herbert shared quantitative data on students, faculty and support staff who identify as people of color.

Dr. Paula Martin, Cultural Competency consultant, reviewed the findings of a focus group that included 10 new teachers of color from all grade levels, stating that themes emerged of teachers choosing Concord for its reputation as a good school system and its formal process of interviewing, hiring and orienting new staff. Mr. Nyamekye shared themes from the data on relationships with supervisors, noting that participants felt that administrators are very welcoming and supportive. Regarding School Culture data themes, Ms. Martin shared that participants felt that representation of students and faculty of color is very important, they need to feel safe and have hard conversations, some colleagues need more training on cultural competency and anti-racist practices, and the more faculty of color can be hired, the better the environment will be for everyone. Mr. Nyamekye shared themes from working relationships with colleagues, including: the importance of emphasizing the fact that they are highly qualified when introducing new faculty of color, encouraging new faculty to fully participate and not feel discouraged because they have not reached professional status and the need for more professional development to encourage colleagues to be open to reflection and change. He then shared data from mentoring, including how helpful and supportive the program is, how helpful it is to have a mentor who works in the same building and the importance of finding an informal mentor who is a person of color when you are an educator of color.

Ms. Herbert shared information on next steps with hiring, partnerships, interview committees, mentoring and support, and faculty discussions. Ms. Wilson noted the importance of the students having “mirrors” in the classroom, thanking Ms. Herbert, Dr. Martin and Mr. Nyamekye for the presentation. Mr. Booth noted that the conscious effort to improve on this is so critical and is a strong indicator of the genuine importance. Ms. Bout noted her personal gratitude for the efforts in hiring and retaining faculty of color. Ms. Mostoufi noted the importance of having teachers of color for the general population of students, enabling them to see different perspectives and experiences. Mr. Nyamekye noted the initiative from the Pittsfield, MA school district that received a grant from DESE to recruit students from North Carolina as new teachers, noting that the community housed the students to orient them to the school district during the interview process and for the first year of employment as well. Mr. Nyamekye spoke about some virtual hiring fairs coming up in the spring. She stated that if the pool were positive, individuals would need to be retested to determine who is positive. Dr. Hunter stated that the state will pay for the first six weeks of the program, projecting approximately $10 per week per person, staff cost would be about $7,200 with a cost of $129,600 for the remainder of the year, with a student cost of #33,000 and $594,000 for the reminder of the year.
